Hafiz Monthly, is an independent Iranian journal - dedicated to Iranian studies in general and to humanities in particular. It covers a wide range of subjects - including Persian literature and history, as well as the cultural, legal and political developments in the present-day Iran. The varied essays and reports represent all the major cultural, legal and political trends in the contemporary Iran.

In each issue, Hafiz Monthly publishes several detailed research articles and interviews, along with a number of shorter works by contemporary Iranian scholars, writers and poets. The contributors range from leading professors, well-known authors and scholars to younger and upcoming writers and poets.

Hafiz Monthly also disseminates information on cultural events in and about Iran and highlights social and economic issues which are of interest to its readership.

Hafiz Monthly is a refereed journal. The selection of all published material is processed through a qualitative assessment by the Editorial Board - with the help of outside experts and external assessors when necessary.
